

SPARK 126

(Matrix Code: SPARK126.00 for StartOver.xyz game.)

DISTINCTION: The thoughtmaps you are using determine how reality works for you.

NOTES: When cartographers first sketched the outline of local territories onto papyrus and parchment the maps extended only as far as the cartographers knew anyone had travelled. Beyond that the world dropped off into an infinite void inhabited only by brutal monsters. The clear but unspoken consequence of a flat-world thoughtmap is that, if you go beyond the limits of known territory, you will fall off and die a horrible death. The flat-world thoughtmap led to diverse cultures evolving in adjoining territories separated only by the mutual fear of leaving home. In this tribalistic orientation the word used for our people and the word used for human beings is the same word. Foreigners, those people not using our one-and-only true set of thoughtmaps, are recognized as barbarians. In other words, people not in our tribe are the edible ones.

About five hundred years ago new technology was invented, namely sailing ships large enough to carry soldiers, horses, guns, sadistic religious fanatics, and communicable diseases across the great oceans. Cartographers brought back new information. The world became spherical, giving rise to the question of which nation owned the “newly discovered” resources. A nationalistic orientation emerged: our thoughtmaps are better than your thoughtmaps if we can kill you. A few wealthy but terrified plutocrats conquer culturally diverse market space through planting franchised coffee houses and burger joints in every village of the world. Modern governments war against foreigners (meaning the not-humans of other corporations) to see who can burn and consume Earth’s remaining resources the fastest.

Fortunately, new technology has emerged. The internet and smart phones open a next evolutionary phase of cartography, particularly in those people who have travelled beyond the borders of their birth culture and realized the radical but undeniable proposition that all thoughtmaps are lies, including their own.

Thoughtmaps are approximations, interpretations, stories about what is. They are not what is. What is comes without a story attached. This is easy to see when you notice that as people shifted from a flatworld thoughtmap of the Earth to a roundworld thoughtmap, they suddenly gained tremendous new possibilities even though the planet itself did not change. This is because human beings do not interact with the world as it is. We interact through our thoughtmaps of the world. When you get a new thoughtmap, you get a new world.

Realizing that all thoughtmaps are lies begins the next chapter in human evolution. Suddenly the game changes from life-or-death competition to having personal choice amongst different flavors of bullshit, like at an ice cream shop. You obtain the ability to simply walk out of tribalistic and nationalistic worldviews and orient yourself globalistically. You activate the capacity to choose which culture you live in regardless of what continent you were born on or the culture of your parents.

You can also declare entirely new cultural space in the global ethnosphere and live in your new country together with like-minded individuals. You can create and live into a new and better future for yourself starting now, without having to convince fifty-one percent of the world's population so that a critical mass of people agree with you. You just do it. Then your new country serves humanity as a seed crystal of next culture that others can more easily copy.

Through these types of experiments whole new forms of culture are emerging that never existed before on Earth, such as archearchy, the creative collaboration of initiated archetypal adult women with initiated archetypal adult men. Already whole communities are implementing more sustainable thoughtware such as circular or spiral rather than hierarchical power structures, initiation-centered schooling, and nonlinear group-intelligence decision-making practices.

In addition, cartographers are now mapping not only physical space, but also intellectual, relational, and energetic spaces. Using the added dimensional qualities opens more interesting options about what is possible in any particular physical space. This explains, for example, how firewalking works. In one energetic space touching your feet to glowing coals causes severe burns, whereas, when the energetics of that space are shifted, not even the hairs on your toes singe.

Spatial cartographers are busy mapping the Great Labyrinth of Spaces, in which each space is connected to every other space, meaning that you can get to anywhere else from here. It is key to know that when maneuvering your thoughtmap, the closer your thoughtmap matches reality, the more precisely your maneuvers change the world.

EXPERIMENTS:

SPARK126.01 Question your thoughtmaps. Here is a list of possible thoughtmaps to begin questioning:

What are your thoughtmaps about who you think you are? Are you Jewish? Moslem? Christian? Are you a spiritual student? A spiritual teacher? Are you Chinese? Palestinian? Indian? Black? Red? Are you upper class? Lower class? Are you a woman? A man? A daughter? A son? Are you a manager? Shaman? Artist? Are you underprivileged? Are you elite? Are you an alcoholic? Are you handicapped? Are you a millionaire? For example, once I lived three months in the Philippines. Eventually I got to know a village man well enough that he could complain to me. He said, "You are an American. You have money, an American passport. You can travel all around the world. I am Philippino. I am poor. I am trapped here and can't go anywhere." I said, "This is not true. You are a human being and I am a human being. The only difference between us is our thoughtware. If you had the thoughtware that I have and you were in your same circumstances, you could be anywhere in the world by tomorrow." He said this was wrong! He really was stuck there! I said, "You are using the 'I am a poor stuck Philippino' thoughtware. If you put my thoughtware in your body, you could be anywhere you want tomorrow. If I gave you all my money and a valid American passport with your present thoughtware, you would not know how to use them."

Question your thoughtmaps. What are you? If you shift your thoughtmaps you shift what is possible and impossible for you. (Secret Hint #33: The most interesting identity I have ever discovered is being a Possibility Manager. Experiment with shifting your identity so that being a manager of what is possible has priority over any other identity (such as victim, nice person, normal) for two weeks. No matter what happens stay being a fully activated Possibility Manager. See what happens.)

What are your thoughtmaps about the resources available to you? Do you think your resources are money? Your stock portfolio? Income properties? Investors with capital? Do you still think you need money to survive? How does holding to these standard modern-culture thoughtmaps actually cut you off from your resources of imagination, your center, your being the Earth, your bubble of space, your grounding cord, your being a servant of Bright Principles, your stellated archetypes, your Gremlin, your pearl, your archetypal lineage, your tool-belt with voice blaster, clicker, sword of clarity, wand of declaration, orthogonal paint brush, disk of nothing, bag of things, Is-Glue and Dissolver? Your ability to inner-navigate your feelings, connecting heart to heart through the Boxes, listening, completing communications, instigating meta-conversations, shifting purpose, holding and navigating discovery-space, creatively collaborating with other initiated adults and going nonlinear?

What are your thoughtmaps about what stops you from doing what you came here to do? Why give them top priority? Do you still think that your personal, physical, cultural or social circumstances determine what is possible for you right now?

What are your thoughtmaps about who or what has power over you? Do you still think it is the government? Your neighbors? The law? Tax collectors? Police? The doctor? Your mother? Your father? Society? Your past? Your fears?

Do you still blame others? Complain? Try to be right? Try to make others wrong? Make excuses? Justify your position? Secretly plot revenge?

Do you still listen to those voices in your head? Do you still experience jealousy? Guilt? Shame? Envy? Greed?

Do you still follow emotional impulses from external authorities? From company brands? From a religion?

Do you still think you should know? Are you still trying to be perfect?

Do you still hold beliefs? Do you still think you don't have enough time?

In each case the experiment is to implement new thoughtmaps, then refuse to get off it, and see what happens. (Note: Upgrading your thoughtmaps has NOTHING to do with positive thinking, affirmations, a method, or wishful thinking. The clarity of a new thoughtmap ignites unquenchable inner inspiration for new action. Practice new actions.)